Tax all his land, Tax all his bread, so po·li·ti·cians can be fed
Tax his tractor, Tax his mule; Teach him “Taxes are the rule”.
Tax his dog and Tax his cat, so Congressmen can all be fat.
Tax all his work, Tax all his pay, SHOUT— “It is the ‘A-mer’-can Way.”
Tax his cow, Tax his goat, Tax his pants, and Tax his coat.
Tax his ties, and Tax his shirt, Tax his work, and Tax his dirt—Tax him until it really hurts.
Tax his tobacco, Tax his drinks, then Tax him if he dares to thinks.
Tax his cigars and Tax his beers, and if he cries—then Tax those tears.
Tax his car and Tax his gas, and if you can then Tax his ass.
Tax both his ears and Tax his nose, Tax him till all he does is groans.
Tax everything he ever owns, Tax kitty litter ... doggy bones.
Tax everything he could desire, Tax fireplace and Tax the fire.
Tax every thing he ever bought; and if he dreams then Tax those thoughts.
Tax him hard and let him know, resistance earns a fatal blow.
Tax from the cradle to the grave, make sure he knows that he’s your slave.
When he screams and hollers loud, Tax him back into the crowd;
Tax and Tax and Tax him more, Tax him till he’s good and sore.
Tax his final resting place, tax him until there’s no free space;
Tax his coffin, Tax his grave, then Tax the sod in which he’s laid.
And put these words upon his tomb, “Taxes drove me to my doom...”
Here is a fitting epitaph, “He was a coward to the last”.
And when he’s dead, don’t dare relax—levy a stiff in-her’tance Tax.
Now please deposit fifty cents; to Tax these words and feudal rents.

[What are taxes for if not to pay the judges and other PUBLIC SERVANTS who were ENTRUSTED WITH DEFENDING OUR RIGHTS? But they like to butter their bread on both sides. The corrupt State [renegade “public servants” with a god-complex] taxes people [their masters] on everything imaginable, as this popular poem of unknown author expressed—which I have greatly changed, added some different sentiments and new lines and improved the cadence.]
